Kew Gardens in Springtime. — Kew Gardens, nearly 300 acres in extent, with 24,000 different species and varieties of plants, are the finest botanical gardens in the world. Among the great services they have rendered to civilization is the introduction of the bread-fruit tree to the West Indies in 1791, of quinine to India in 1860, and of rubber to the Malay Peninsula in 1873.
